Skanska sells holding in UK PPP project for SEK 96 Million

Skanska is selling its 33 percent holding in the UK Public Private Partnership (PPP) project New Clinical Building at Kings College Hospital in Camberwell, South London. The sales price is corresponding to SEK 96 Million, and the capital gain amounts to SEK 64 Million, which will be included in earnings for the third quarter. The sales price exceeds the market value assessed by Skanska at year-end 2005 by 40 percent. The buyer is Infrastructure Investors, a British infrastructure fund.

Skanska was part of the original consortium that designed, constructed, financed and now operates the New Clinical Building at Kings College, within the framework of the UK PFI scheme for Private Public Partnerships. The consortium was awarded the project in late 1999, and the construction was completed in 2002.

"Our strategy is to build long term partnerships. This particular project was developed in the very early days of the UK PFI and we are proud to have played a key part in this project. Following completion of the development phase we are now focusing on strategic partnerships developed over the last few years and this sale aligns with that objective," says Simon Hipperson, President of Skanska Infrastructure Development.

Skanska is a leading Public Private Partnership (PPP) company in the United Kingdom. Skanska is responsible for the development of the Barts and The London new hospitals program, for which the construction contracts amount to about SEK13.6 billion – construction work started this spring.

Skanska receives two contracts for new Yankee Stadium – Skanska's contracts totaling USD 81 M, about SEK 607 M

Skanska has been awarded two contracts for the new Yankee Stadium to be built in Bronx, New York. Under the first contract amounting to USD 65 M, about SEK 487 M, Skanska will furnish and install the structural steel and metal deck. Skanska is also responsible for the piling. This contract amounts to USD 16 M, approximately SEK 120 M. Both contracts are included in order bookings in the third quarter.

The client is Turner Construction which is the construction manager for the owner, the New York Yankees Partnership.

Skanska's assignment includes purchase, delivery and erection of the entire structural steel main framing and thereafter to mount the precast concrete stadia units. This involves about 13,000 tons of structural steel and some 1,700 concrete elements.

The steelwork will begin in 2007 and the new Yankee Stadium is scheduled to be completed for the start of the 2009 season. Under a separate contract, Skanska has also begun work on the piles for the new stadium, which requires both drilled and driven piles. This project is expected to be completed in five months.

The new Yankee Stadium is being constructed adjacent to the original stadium built in 1923. The stadium, the home field of the New York Yankees baseball team, was renovated by Skanska in 1970.

The exterior of the new stadium will replicate the original stadium's characteristic façade. The new Yankee Stadium will house 51,000 fans, slightly less than old stadium, but in better comfort.

In recent years, Skanska has built a number of stadiums in the US, such as the Reliant Stadium in Houston, Texas, the Gillette Stadium in Boston, Massachusetts, Philips Arena and Olympic Stadium, currently Turner Field, in Atlanta, Georgia, as well as a large number of stadiums at U.S. universities.

The projects will be implemented by Skanska USA Civil, which specializes in such infrastructure projects as transport construction, power generation, water treatment and water pollution control plants. With operations in the eastern US, Colorado and California, the company has some 4,000 employees.
